
Jing Li Biography 2014

Jing Li is currently in his 2nd year of study in College of Veterinary Medicine at Kansas State University. He was born in Hebei Province of Northern China. During September 2007 to June 2012, he got his undergraduate education in College of Veterinary Medicine, China Agricultural University with a Bachelor's degree. In September 2012 to May 2013, he studied in the pre-vet program as a transfer student in Kansas State University. In August 2013, he was admitted by College of Veterinary Medicine, Kansas State University.

He is a member of a number of professional and student organizations including the student chapters at KSU vet school of SCAVMA, KSU Bovine Club, and Equine Club. In his first year he was the Secretary of Small Ruminant Club and right now he is the President-elect of Nutrition Club and the Fundraising Co-Chair of Radiology Club. Back to his vet school in China, he was also the Vice President of the Student Union of College of Veterinary Medicine, China Agricultural University.

He is also into the research field. In his undergraduate time in China, he participated in Undergraduate Research Program for 2 years at a diagnostic lab supervised by Dr. Cheng He of his vet school. His article "Primary epidemiological survey on the infection of hepatitis E virus among swine in Beijing suburbs" was published in Chinese Journal of Veterinary Medicine in 2012. Right now he is also working on a MS degree along with the DVM degree at Beef Cattle Institute in KSU supervised by Dr. Daniel Thomson.

Outside of academics, Jing is very involved in university activities. He is a student leader of Chinese Students and Scholars Union of KSU, and he is going to be one of the starters of a new student organization, Chinese Veterinary Students Association. In addition to that, he is also the intramural Co-Chair of Class of 2017, and he enjoys a lot of intramural sports with his classmates and friends including basketball, soccer, badminton, and flag football.