
Chelsea Anderson Biography 2013

My name is Chelsea Anderson, and I am a fourth-year veterinary student (Class of 2014). I went to the University of Connecticut for my undergraduate (Go Huskies!) where I majored in Animal Science and Pathobiology, and minored in Wildlife Conservation. During my time at Cornell, I have spent two summers pursuing international research, first in Uganda studying sustainable methods of diagnosing ehrlichiosis in dogs, and in Indonesia surveying the prevalence of anthrax in soil surrounding Ujon Kulon National Park. I also assisted in the teaching of a poultry health management course in Liberia, West Africa this past January. My career interests include global public health and conservation medicine. To keep my life balanced, I love traveling, running, yoga, and hiking with my labradoodle, Bella June!
